Marcus is thirty years old and soon to be married to Tabitha. He is from a normal middle class family and was educated at his local school. Tabitha is from an upper class family. She was sent to private boarding school at a young age and her family own a very successful chocolate company. Tabitha really has no need to work and she receives a very generous allowance from her father, who just wants her to be content. After seeing Marcus bring so much happiness to his daughter, he suggests they get married. After three years of dating, they will finally seal the knot. Tabitha is a beautiful woman, who has an amazing figure and a successful business. She loves Marcus but she doesn't quite like his party lifestyle. She changes him and mends his partying ways, but there is always a little of the old Marcus in the background. Tabitha doesn't really want him to have a stag party, because she thinks that his friends don't really like her and will try and ruin the wedding. She would rather they have a party together, but Marcus will not hear of it. After finding himself locked in a cellar on his stag night, Marcus begins to wonder if he is making the right decision in marrying Tabitha. He is locked in with barmaid Beth and he begins to realise that his relationship is not that perfect. After some serious talking and a little fancy for Beth, he decides to focus on becoming the best husband that he can be. Will Marcus get the chance to be an amazing husband? Will Tabitha accept him as he is? Marcus is about to embark on some serious life changes and it's definitely not through his own choice.
