Who did these alien 'Protectors' think they were, anyway? Arrogant bastards! Just because the Outer Galaxy had been stupid enough to call on their help two hundred years ago, why should it still be bound to an unfair Covenant when the danger was long past? And had that protection ever really been worth the loss of independence? There weren't many who now thought so. So was the sabotage of the spaceship Medusa on this hellish jungle planet an ordinary case of space-piracy, or was it to capture one of the hated aliens? If so, what did they want from him? And what did they have in mind for the rest of the passengers and crew? It didn't seem a good idea to wait around to find out. Yet how could the castaways survive the trek to safety without the alien's protection and special knowledge of the planet? It was all very irritating, not to say dangerous.
